The fete champetre and parlor concert

last night on the grounds of Wm. Sumner, Esq., Walnut Hills, for the benefit of Vine-street Congregational Church, was very largely attended, was a great financial success, and, above all, afforded such an evening of solid enjoyment as is seldom witnessed. The attendance reached not far from five hundred persons, every one of whom delight in bearsons, every one of whom delight in bearing testimony that the entertainment was, in all respects, a brilliant success. The beautiful grounds were lighted by four lecomotive head-lights, fourteen fine reflectors and 'innumerable Chinese lanterns; while Prof. Currier's Band without stint discoursed sweet music that resounded all over the vicinity, and even attracted the attention of people on even attracted the attention of people on the Kentucky hills. The weather was not favorable about the time for start-ing, but people knowing that Vine-street Church never does things by halves, de-termined to hold Mr. Sumner responsi-ble for a good time that would justify braving the storm, and go any how. The concert in the house, the promenades and outdoor pleasures on the grounds— the excellent suppor, the fine music and entertaining reading, all went to make entertaining reading, all went to make up a grand success, a description of which in detail would almost be impossible.

ments in substance to the Coroner this morning as follows:

She met the deceased, B. W. Cunningham, for the first time at half-past 10 o'clock, the night of his death. At that time she did not know who he was; had never seen him before. As she was going south on Eim street that night the deceased overtook her near Longworth street and said something to her which she can not now remember. They walked together a lew rods when she said, "I don't want you to walk with me." He replied, "the street is free for everybody." The deceased appeared to be drunk, and was staggering. The two finally parted a short distance west of Eim, and the woman proceeded home to her room, at No. 208 West Filth street, where she romained until arrested by the officers subsequent to Cunningham's fatal fall.
